Definitions for Target Oriented Display

Warning: This category should include resources that have been committed for the purpose of providing warning, either long term or short term to the United States or its allies. The following are considered to be warning activities:

1. Monitoring of weapon systems and forces to determine changes in their posture or capability that would indicate an increased likelihood of their employment against the U.S. or its allies.
2. Monitoring of conflicts not involving the U.S. for changes that would indicate the need for direct U.S. involvement.
3. Monitoring of political situations that could develop into military confrontations involving the U.S. or its allies.
4. Providing information to national authorities, theatre commands, or local commands that will allow them to develop plans or ready forces to meet threats previously unknown or considered unlikely to develop.

TOD Definitions

Tactical Intelligence: This category should include all resources whose primary mission is to supply information to theater or local commanders for developing plans for or employing forces in tactical conflict. This category should include both organic and non-organic resources. Resources that are organic to the theater or local command should be targeted in two ways. That portion of the resources required to supply information only if hostilities arise should be targeted to "contingency". That portion of the resources required to supply information both before and during hostilities should be allocated to the geopolitical area where the supported unit plans to conduct operations.

TOD Definitions

Technical Intelligence: This category should include all resources committed to obtaining information on and producing a description of technical characteristics and capabilities of weapons systems.

General Intelligence: This category should include all resources committed to a given target area not included in the warning, technical, tactical or mapping and charting category. A main component of these resources will be the effort expended toward obtaining the current strategic order of battle and an understanding of the normal status of forces and weapons systems.
